Refer to 2Q26 Webcast transcript (29 July 2026)[2] for the following additional information on:

- Volumes:
  - Deposits: "in the second quarter, you have had higher inflation in most countries, certainly in Spain. And I think it -- from a macro point of view, it makes sense to see that the generation of excess deposits is lower in that environment" [...] "in terms of competition, this is a competitive market. We know it's very visible. But various banks are pursuing different strategies. And I think that is not substantially different from what we've seen last year or what we have seen last quarter. So I wouldn't say there are structural or any other relevant changes from that point of view, again, obviously on the basis of a very competitive market."
  - Loan growth: "I think that probably we are going to be ending the year closer to 7%. By segments, I think that mortgages may be 4%, consumer lending, if not double digit, close to double digit and then businesses with to some extent a little bit more volatility here from CIB, larger tickets, et cetera. But very probably, if not at 8%, very close to 8%".
  - International Branches: "It's basically investment-grade lending where obviously we have good returns. We have risk-adjusted returns around 20% in overall the branches, the international branches, and we're obviously being very selective" [...] "But clearly you would expect some growth faster than in Spain, but not as fast as we've seen in the past and gradually converging."
  - Commercial gap: "Considering the liquidity reserves we have, which we think is clearly competitive strength versus competitors, we think that we are far from a situation where we need to change our, let's say, commercial strategy because of that situation. So, we are not planning to do something different because of this situation versus what we are already planning to do in terms of our client funding, retail funding or even corporate funding."
  - Wealth management funds: "On wealth management, my comments would be that the pace of inflows is really good. Moreover, inflows are increasing into, let's say, longer-term, long-duration products. I mean by duration not only fixed income but also equities and global equities, which results into, let's say, products with a slightly wider margin. So, it's a positive." [...] "And let's say, assuming that there are no major changes, I would say geopolitically speaking, that always may result into markets correcting or volatility, et cetera, that can affect that pace of inflows into long-term savings solutions, we are pretty confident that we are going to be delivering volumes in line, let's say, with last year, which was already like a record-high year."
- NII:
  - "We are today reconfirming our targets for 2027 that were revised upwards in January" [...] "that target already accommodates quite a wide range of potential outcomes in terms of rates, not only levels but also the shape of the yield curve."
  - "Higher rates is always a net positive, so you have this 100% clear. The pace of the impact of higher rates is true that it depends a little bit on the steepness or flattening of the yield curve. But at the end of the day, after some time, it has the impact it has to have."
  - "I am not going to comment on the consensus today, because I did that last quarter about 2028, because it was the first time we were disclosing our internally compiled consensus, and I thought it could be helpful. And basically, what I wanted to emphasize back then is that NII is not flattening in 2027, and the evolution, positive evolution, is continuing beyond that. I wanted to emphasize that"

[2] Source: Bloomberg – CaixaBank Final Transcript of 2Q26 Earnings call (29-July -2026). Link to the 2Q26 Webcast - https://edge.media-server.com/mmc/p/rw6huerw

> "On the customer spread [ex hedges], what we saw this quarter is clearly the trough because it's impacted by all those, let's say, non-recurring and technical factors that are also impacting the bad book yield of the loan book, some kind of seasonality depending on the day count that is impacting the yield. And, well, from here, it's going to be gradually recovering. So, I think that the 300 basis points area is the place to be soon, maybe by the end of the year. So, I think that we are safe on that front."

> "...when I mentioned this kind of 50:50 between loan spreads and deposit spreads, it was like a broad message. But then if you want me to be more specific, if it's going to be 160 and 140 or 160 and 150, so now it's probably too early to say. But the general dynamics in terms of lending are good ones in terms of margins. So I would say that on consumer lending, on SMEs, on corporates, Also, on all the new lending that is coming from our CIB international branches is lending that is meeting all our criteria in terms of profitability" [...] "There is a segment that is different, which is the mortgage segment, which I don't want to elaborate, but you know that it has its own dynamics. And to some extent is also impacting the overall end result. But yes, broadly speaking, I think that 150 should be the place to be, around that level, but difficult to be more specific considering the dynamics of certain segments."

> "Approximately 50%, a little bit less than that of our interest-bearing deposits are indexed. So, I'll reprice it automatically as rates move." [...] "With market rates approaching 12 months, Euribor here is like the benchmark for time deposit. So as this yield is getting closer to 3% if not at 3% at some moment. So obviously the new production of time deposits has to adjust" [...] "That's the plan and we expect that the cost of our deposits ex hedges to be slightly below 50 basis points as an average for the year. So that means that obviously we will be increasing according to higher market rates."

- Revenues from services:

> "So I think that the base case is that we can do better than this circa 5% or at least we are going to be clearly at the upper bound of that guidance."

> Banking Fees: "I think we're still going to see some weakness in this line, but we're probably going to stabilize that line going forward, maybe not this year but later on."

> Protection: "is expected to perform in terms of P&L, if not at double-digit, very close to double-digit for the year"

- Costs:

> "Costs, not much to say. If you look first half versus first half, up by 4.5%, in line with our guidance." [...] "You may see that general expenses and depreciation are growing at a faster pace as a result of the execution of our intense plan on AI and IT transformation." [...]

> "What we've seen so far in Spain is salaries growing around 3% which is in line with what the ECB is actually forecasting for the Eurozone like it was last year. But again I guess this is going to be data dependent as the ECB said. Inflation may pick up or not and there's some clear uncertainty and that's uncertainty around rate environment that we also commented or Javier also commented on. I don't want to be more specific than that because there will be next year again a new negotiation of collective bargaining agreement both for former saving banks and former commercial banks. And obviously that will have a typical negotiation dynamics. We are confirming our guidance in terms of the overall cost evolution for this year and next year. And that doesn't mean that there are no pressures here and there and we'll need to see how we deal with them. But we also have our own programs to contain cost growth in other parts of the business. But both inflation environment and obviously technological expense are putting pressure. We're still confident that we can keep our guidance where we want it to be, which is what we have obviously guided you for growth which is coming down next year significantly from the 4.5% that we have guided for this year."

- CoR: "On IFRS 9 models updates, back to my initial comment, we have included a prudent recalibration of the macro scenario weightings, including an additional scenario that is weighting 10% of supply shock. That's a downside risk scenario as a result of a supply shock." [...] "As a result of that, we are assigning EUR40 million of the overlays and we are having an extra impact on loan loss charges approximately of circa EUR30 million." [...] "But as I was saying before, cost of risk 24 basis points. We are really comfortable about future evolution." [...] "The ratio comes down to 1.78%, coverage 81%. You may see that the evolution of NPLs across the different segments is very benign, very favorable, so we are not observing any sign of deterioration at all."
- Gains & Losses: "We have a strong profit here from the disposal of other real estate assets, repossessed assets basically, taking advantage of very good market conditions in Spain. And this is something that may continue for some more quarters as we continue to dispose at a very good pace and with good margins." [...] "I think we're going to have some quarters to come with a positive contribution in this line. Clearly above zero, not as high as this quarter most likely, somewhere in between, it won't be just zero or plus 1, but something more significant, but not as much as now."
- RWAs: "So we are targeting, let's say, 150 basis points (CAGR 25-27 growth) less than the loan book."
- Capital deployment: "We have said very clearly that we want to make sure that we grow organically, always subject to appropriate returns, and that is our first priority, organic growth. And this is clearly the case this quarter, where I would say growth is probably even higher than normal, because of some seasonality and actually a very good quarter. But this is our priority. Then second priority and completely compatible with the first one is to maintain attractive remuneration policy in terms of dividend payment with a 50% to 60% payout. And the reality, because we are fairly profitable at this point, is that we generate capital on top. And as we generate that capital, we have obviously been implementing share buybacks and we will continue to do so. M&A is different. M&A, we said, is not our priority."

Refer to Bank of America 2026 European Financials Conference fireside chat transcript (22 September 2026)[3] for additional information on:

- Volumes:
  - > Deposits: "And the situation continues to be, I would say, pretty calm. So, generally speaking, the situation is orderly. You have some new players in the market, obviously with higher rates trying to attract clients with a headline rate but well. I think that is part of their client acquisition process. And at the end of the day, the amounts involved are not that material to change our strategy."

    "We have now an inflation in Spain that is circa over 4%. So it's 4-3% currently. What we now foresee is as a consequence of that higher level of inflation as some impact on the savings rate. So last year the savings rate was circa 12%. We are now forecasting a small reduction to, let's say, slightly below 11% for 2026 and probably, depending on the evolution of inflation, but some additional reduction into 2027." [...] "As a result of that, maybe this year the pace of growth for deposits is a little bit lower than last year. So last year we grew circa 5%, 5.3% exactly. Pretty much in line with the industry a little bit, some gains in market share but not that material." [...] ".. about deposit competition which I say is fair, but is that the overall deposit base in the system may be somehow affected by this higher inflation versus our initial expectation."

[3] Source: Bloomberg –Final Transcript CaixaBank Bank of America conference European Financials conference (22 Sept. 2026). Link to listen to the fireside chat: Presentations to investors | CaixaBank

Loan growth "Nominal GDP because inflation is picking up is close to 6%. So, in fact, year-on-year in June we were growing 8% on the loan portfolio. So there's definitely growth." [...] "We probably, on our own numbers, are estimating that those numbers have come slightly down from the 8%, maybe to the 7% level, or even just below. On the mortgage side is where I see, I would say, less potential. We have growth, but there's increasingly an affordability issue" [...] "So I think affordability is probably going to slow down the growth."

> Wealth management funds: "So markets are doing well, the pace of inflows is steady. So, we are having on average like over a billion per month of inflows into let's say long-term saving solutions also in terms of the mix of those long-term savings, longer duration."

- NII:

> "On several fronts, business is doing well, mainly on the lending side; I would say rates are higher. The yield curve was also having its moves, some kind of flattening, and then also we have higher inflation. So I think that we need some more time to reassess all those circumstances impacting NII, when we are closer to formally present guidance for 2027. So I'm sure that by then, when we present year-end results, we are going to be able to further, let's say, fine-tune the guidance for next year."

> "We have been targeting a 7.5% NII sensitivity to a parallel shift of 100 basis points of the yield curve. I have to say that, as a result of some front-loading of our hedging activity into the first quarter when rates started to move upwards, and also due to faster loan growth, we have currently a slightly lower than that 7.5% NII sensitivity is more like circa 5%." [...] "I have to say also, and I mentioned it at the very beginning, that the yield curve is not moving in parallel. So when I mentioned this NII sensitivity, by the way, this is the sensitivity one-year, one-year forward not the sensitivity for the first year that is much more contained. But this is in case of a parallel move, which is not actually what is going on because if you look to put some numbers into it year-to-date, implicit rates for '27 have moved upwards by approximately 1 percentage point as an example. Implicit rates for '29, as an example, have moved upwards by slightly over 50 basis points. So there is a clear flattening here. So hence also the shape of the yield curve has some impact on NII sensitivity. So a flatter yield curve erodes to some extent NII sensitivity as we borrow short and lend long. So you have this kind of mismatch between assets and liabilities repricing. So but something that we have been commenting just to make sure that everyone understands the different dynamics."

- Revenues from services:

> "So I think that this kind of mid-single-digit guidance we have given for our three-year plan is really with upside risk."

> Wealth management and protection: "In both cases, we are expecting to deliver, in terms of P&L, a positive evolution that may be approaching double digit, if not a double digit. So, depending on there is some -- the case of wealth management always some impact from markets and mark-to-market effects, etc."

> Banking Fees: "So on that part that currently is circa 30% of our service, the pool of services revenues, there is more underlying pressure and maybe we can expect more like a flattish evolution. Also a heads up is that also as we are more active on SRTs, the fee we pay for SRT is also accounted in that P&L line."

- RWAs & SRTs: "So we already have like slightly over 25 basis points impact of capital relief (SRTs) on our CET1 ratio. We can do more. So we are going to do more. We have been guiding like okay that's a soft, let's say, target of our risk weighted assets to grow by approximately 150 basis points less than our loan book."
- Capital deployment: "But obviously that organic growth and the more when we see levels that are 20% (RoTE) employing capital at 20%, it's a much more attractive proposition in our mind for investors than returning it. So there's no question that the priority is organic growth." [...] "I think it's a better situation, the current one, the one where we would say we have to buy back our shares, all of our excess profits after the dividend, because there's no growth in the business. There is growth in business that's great news."
- Profitability: "...18% (RoTE) this year and we've guided for circa 20% next year, those are levels that are of course sustainable" [...] "Obviously, if you were to put in a spreadsheet, as many of you do, the trends that we have for volumes, revenues, margins, costs, and cost of risk in the current environment, and you don't change any of the current trends, you're going to see return on tangible equity increasing, not just stable."
